

I am a resident of a state which has a telephone privacy law. To date this law appears to have been quite effective as I have had no unwanted solicitations from "telemarketers" since its adoption. I urge you not to adopt rules that would lessen the standards that currently exist in my state. However, if you are compelled to do so, please consider allowing current state laws to stand if they are more restrictive or set higher standards than those you propose to adopt.